Professional Overview

David is the Chair of the firm's Business Group. His practice focuses on all aspects of legal counseling for businesses, including business planning, formation of corporations, partnerships and limited liability companies, mergers and acquisitions, and the negotiation and drafting of commercial agreements. He has extensive experience in dealing with real estate matters, including financings, purchases, sales, exchanges, leasing, and structuring of entities for ownership and development of real property projects. For many years he represented clients in the solid waste industry in connection with planning for the ownership, development, acquisition, and sale of solid waste facilities such as landfills, transfer stations, composting and recycling centers, and hauling operations, purchases and sales of solid waste companies, and transactions involving contaminated property. David began his career as a tax attorney and continues to provide transactional tax planning advice to businesses and individuals and assistance with estate planning and probate matters.

Personal

When I am not practicing law, I travel with my family whenever we can. On my own, I enjoy playing the guitar, carpentry, and home remodeling. I can never find enough things to fix.
